its work this year.

During the war we kept well in the background; we felt that ours was not the prior claim. Meanwhile the people of the city poured out millions to alleviate suffering in many parts of the world. There is much still to be done abroad, and we do not want to deter any one from continuing to give to the work there, but now that the war is over it seems only right that we should make a special effort to give relief to the poor of New York, to those who, because of death or incapacity of the wage carner, are in serious want through no fault of their own.

It means just as much to be hungry in New York as in Belgium, and it hurts as much to be cold here as anywhere else in the world.
